Dr. Matthew Dalbey, Director of the US EPA’s Office of Community Revitalization. (Formerly Sustainable Communities)

Dr. Matthew Dalbey is the director of the US EPA’s Office of Community Revitalization. During his 14 years at EPA he has been recognized as a thought leader on more sustainable, resilient and innovative approaches to the growth and development of communities. He has launched technical assistance programs that link economic revitalization and environmental protection and led these programs through transitions across changes in Federal leadership. The interagency assistance programs have been used to help hundreds of communities across the country. During the Obama Administration, he served as the deputy director of the White House Council on Strong Cities, Strong Communities. He is an adjunct faculty member at George Washington University’s Sustainable Urban Planning program. Prior to joining EPA he spent five years on the faculty of the Department of Urban and Regional Planning at Jackson State University. He has a Ph.D. from Columbia University in the City of New York, a Master of City Planning and a Master of Architectural History from the University of Virginia, and Bachelor degree in government from the College of William & Mary.
